DEBT COLLECTION

Q. I can't afford to pay my debt right now, like my car payment or credit card bill. Are there protections for me against debt collectors?

A. Creditors and debt collectors cannot do the following during the public health emergency and for 60 days afterward:

- threaten to file or file a lawsuit;
- threaten to take or take your wages or property;
- threaten to repossess or repossess your car;
- threaten to visit or visit you at your home or work; or
- confront you in a public place.

For things other than real property (e.g., mortgages), debt collectors cannot communicate with you about the debt during the public health emergency unless you communicate with them first.

CREDIT REPORTS

Q. I'm worried my credit score will be negatively affected because I can't pay my bills during the public health emergency. Is there any help for me?

A. Yes, if you experience a financial hardship resulting directly or indirectly from the public health emergency and report it in good faith to a credit reporting agency, the agency must accept and include a personal statement provided by you and include it with any consumer report or credit score, unless you request that it be removed.

CONSUMER PROTECTIONS

Q. I think someone is trying to take advantage during the public health emergency by raising prices or selling fake products. Is that legal?

A. There are laws to protect you from people trying to take advantage, especially in an emergency. Here are some examples:

- It is OK for merchants to stop people from stockpiling, like when your grocery store lets you buy only one package of toilet paper.
- It is NOT OK for merchants or anyone to price gouge. That means it is not legal to charge more money than usual for items that are popular or hard to get because of the emergency, like face masks or hand sanitizer.
- It is NEVER OK for anyone to make false claims and the penalties are higher during a public health emergency. For example, it is not legal to say something cures COVID-19 when it does not.
